

KATHA STUDIO

Monsoon Meera

When the village well cracks dry, a girl who can hear clouds must convince the monsoon to come home.

Issue 01 · Folk fantasy · Kerala backwaters

Lead: Meera Rainbinder

Original Indian c

Monsoon Meera · Issue 01

Panel 1 of 6

Alappuzha. The sky has been holding its breath for forty-one days.

NARRATOR

“The well sang once. Now it only coughs dust.”

DRY WIND

Meera climbs the tiled roof at dawn, the way other people climb into prayer.

MEERA

“I can hear you sulking up there. Come down and argue properly.”

DRIP... DRIP

The monsoon answers as a cloud with an elephant's patience and a child's temper.

MONSOON

“They forgot the old songs. Why should I remember their fields?”

RUMBLE

Meera offers the only honest bargain: she will teach the children the rain-song again.

MEERA

“If they forget, I’ll remind them. If you forget, I’ll shout at the sky until you don’t.”

CRACK!

The well overflows. Banana leaves become drums. The village learns how to be wet and grateful.

AMMA

“That girl talks to weather like it owes her rent.”

SPLASH

Monsoon Meera · Issue 01

Panel 6 of 6

A single raindrop hangs from Meera's earring. It never evaporates.

MONSOON

“Call me when they forget. I like being argued with.”

SOFT RAIN

Katha Studio · Original work